With the help of improved machinery the progressive individual farmer is producing much more than the average farmer did a generation ago, and men of this class are keeping up the productive qualities of their farms. They observe certain principles of farm management; they do not sell fodder or roughage; they keep live stock and grow feed for them; they sell animals and their products. fruits, vegetables, etc. As long as the ploneer on virgin soils grows wheat at prices that have been current the progressive farmer grows little or none. He keeps improved stock that respond to their keeping and that put on the greatest per cent of meat on the prime parts. He puts all manure promptly on the fields.
